The convention between England, France and Spain, as o a joint action on Mexico, has been signed, and we are

France twenty-five hundred, and Spain five thousand.

Making a force of eight thousand in all.

I have a good reason to believe that France will send a much larger number of troops than the above named, and you will judge the same when I state that the French quadron will be composed of one vessel of the line, four arge frigates (steamers), a corvette, an aviso armed, fiv nats and five transports. Any one with any idea e movement of troops will at once understand the fleet is intended for more than not less than six thousand picked troops will be sent by this government, including artillery and cavarry.

He has urged upon them the getting their forces into readiness for spring campaigning, and has, we are told, encouraged Kossuth to preach up an ana, we are tool, encouraged Rossuth to preach up an attack upon Venetia as preliminary to the liberation of Hungary. All this is the result of the Compiegne interview, and Austria will pay the piper. The Seward-Lyons Correspondence and Its Importa France Watching for an English War Against the United States-Palmerston Held in Check by Napoleon's Armet-Pertivities at Compleyne—The Swiss Question—Pauper-ism and Death of the Man who Saved Queen Victoria's Life. de., de. Seward and Russell correspondence—for Lord Lyons is entirely lost sight of in his principal—is in every one's mouth. Mr. Seward reaps all the honors of it Poor Lard Lyons' clumsy letter is spoken of with pitiable contempt, while Mr. Seward's masterly response meets with almost unanimous commendation. There is evidently an idea-a hope, I may say-that very serious complications are about to ensue between the President's government and Great Britain. The Constitutionnel of this morning says John Boll has his hands now so full of Brother Jonathan that for the nonce he has dropped his impertmence with France; and in the Swiss business of Vallie des Dappen the Times is candid enough to tell the Swiss not to be so fond of perpetually crying "wolf."

I believe I speak the simple truth only when I say that, next to a war with England herself, there is nothing that ald so much delight the French nation as to see hestilities break out between the United States and Great Britain, and many are disposed to think that now that King Cotton is no longer master of the situation, Eng land will be less slow than heretofore to pick at the gauntlet so haughtily flung in her face. This is an opi nion, as regards the present subject of discussion, which I for one do not share; all who have paid attention to the career of Lord John Russell during the pest thirty years must have observed that, with a great display of audacity, to statesman is more easily driven from his pesi-tion. His course as a foreign minister is altogether an untried one. But in all his civil administration it has been one long succession of big words and little deeds. No friend or partisan ever felt the same confidence in him that they did in Peel. This last awatesman, if he were slow to speak or act, was remarkably firm when he did so. Every one knew when he brought forward a measure or uttered a determination, he would hold to every detail or resign his place. Not so with Lord John, each of whose great measures and grand talks, from his first re-form bill to his last, has been so frittered away or pooh pooled by his opponents that it is not easy to discern always what the original material was composed of. And I have not the smallest doubt that Mr. Seward's manly reply to the impertinent epistic the Foreign Secretary has remitted through Lord Lyons will be accepted by the noble lord in a very amiable spirit. Had Mr. Seward flinched in ever so small a degree before these gross importanences, Earl Russell's conceit would soon have swelled on to greatest arrogance; now the President's government is master of the situation, and it will be Mr. Seward's own fault if he does not keep it.

England, be assured, is in no mood for going to war with America. She knows too well that despite commercial treaties, Mexican co-operation and her industrial exhibition for next year, France holds a pistol to ber bosom. Every ship that parted for America, every gun that crossed the Atlantic, every soldier and sailor that quitted her shores, would be so much taken, from that strength which she knows she needs for a foe nearer home. A war with America, in conjunction with America's rebel slave States, would disgust the very heart of England, and there is no ministry—or possible toniestry—saffeiently strong to seriously contemplate it. Let Mr. Seward therefore, bravely speak out and snap his fingers at "pocky little Johnny."

France knows as well as the federal States of America that Great Britain is only biding her time to raise a sone

"cocky little Johnny."
France knows as well as the federal States of America that Great Britain is only biding her time to raise a going of triumph the moment any reverse occurs. It is thus conviction which makes the linguish alliance at all times At the present time there is no doubt that France has great difficulties to contend with. The harvest has been aing alarly deficient. A cry of distress is beginning to make itself heard. The government sees with inquietude the daily additions made to the working classes of the capital, at a moment when the want of capital prevents it entering upon fresh enterprises. The whole trade of America has ceased. Paris had no such customers as the wealthy citizens of the United States. Enter what macarin you would, the most gorgeous or the most tast-ful object was ordered for America. Articles of virtu, regardless of cast, wore bespoken by American agents, and the richest rike, shavels and lace of Chantilly had a similar embargo upon them. You may see the immediate of roct already in the streets. Apartments are rapidly falling in price. American citizents are all field, and there is a low wail of discontent distinctly available in the submits. Well, all this might happen to England to morrow—any, even now there are reports of another famins in Ir-land. But what the French feel so bitterly is this, that across the Channel there is an evil spirit mocking them in their hour of trial. It was but two days ago that an elaborate verification and the same that the french recommended the country from the morgapaper, in which their coming mi fortunes were discounted, so to speak, and the end of their existing glories broadly predicted. The Emperor, down, to the humblest peasant, knows that nothing but success—unbounded success—is sufficient to preserve an amicable understanding with his neighbor; and this knowledge it is which he shares in common with the government of the United States, which, like himsolf, its perfectly conscious that the very first servious disaster it may sustain against its rebel States would be the signal for a rupture with England.

There has been a series of splendid festivities at Complete, when the remaining the price of prices, and the Prince dioperior and the back of the prices of prices, and the Prince dioperior of the land of the prices of prices, and Continent.

The Emperor, it is said, is to leave Complegue much carlier than was at first intended. The troubled state of political affairs, the discontent arising from the rise in the price of bread, the necessity of repeatedly conferring with the Minister of the United States, and the constant supervise or which the new Angio-French treaty demands, will oblige him to take up his quarters at the Tulieries. The reconstruction going on at the southern extremity obliges his Majesty to take temporary apartments in the centre of the palace.

his Majesty to take temperers is excellent; but the Duchess of the palance.

The health of the Emprees is excellent; but the Duchess de Montijo, her Majesty's mother, is understood to be in a very precarious state, and the Duc d'Albe, her son inlaw, was summoned by express to attend her bedside only a few days ago.

The Duke de Mayenta has returned from Berlin, where his reception was so flattering.

From Hamburg we hear that trade still continues to languish under the pressure occasioned by the Americah troubles, the melancholy assurances of which had been rather intensified than alleviated by the progress of events at the seat of war. Many ships have been lying idle the whole summer; but lately a considerable number of steamers and sailing vessels had been chartered by the States government, through their agents in England, to be used as transports for their troops. This had in some measure improved the position of the Hamburg shipowers, on which the rise of freights on exports from England to the North of Europe, amounting to twenty-five per cent on cotton wool and machinery, and full one hundred per cent on cotton twist, had even produced a beneficial effect.

He caught a severe cold at the saloon run up for the occasion, and not built of very solid temperature and especially to thorough draughts, which, in this climate and at this season of the year, are not to be braved with impunity; but, congone through with for the last three or four weeks, it is no wonder that he should have broken down at last, and require some rest to recruit his strength and preanire have suffered not less than their royal master. Seve ral of the old generals and Court functionaries are laid up with gout or rheumatism, and the Fathers of the City are in danger of losing their chief Burgomaster, Kranswick, who took to his bed a day or two after the grand reception, and a not expected to survive. The Crown Princess, too, is missposed, but her sickness is rather of a pleasing than of an alarming character, arising, as it does, from her finding herself again in that situation in which ladies wish to policipesed, but her sickness is rather of a pleasing than of an alarming character, arising, as it does, from her finding herself again in that situation in which ladies wish to be "who love their lords."

The Prussian government are just now in a state of considerable uneasiness, occasioned by the accounts from Russia, where a catastrophe appears to be impending that must reach disastrously upon Poinnd and the whole east of Europe. King William and his advisors are by no means satisfied with the policy of the Car. They attribute the disturbances in his dominions to he excessive mituses and indufence, and are of opinion that the only was to restore tranquillity, and to prevent a bloody outbreak; is to resort to the same system of stem repression that was pursued by his father. They have employed all the influence they possess at the Court of St. Petersburg to advice a trong measures and the proclamatic process of the partity owing to the Russian authorities can to have taken fright at their ownowless, and the appointment of Wiolopokkit to the governorship of Poland, which was announced yesterday in a telegraphic despate from Warsaw, would show that they are determined for try once more whether concessions to the formatical spirit of the Poles may not succeed in allaying the ferment which the utmost severity has been unde to appress. So much is certain, hat quite a coolings has arisen between the King and his naphew, and it is a certain, hat quite a coolings has arisen between the King and his naphew, and it are including the fears of, the Car, and inducing him to make the most alarming intelligence from Russia and Poland, it which wortfring is painted in the bracket colors and it was a summary to the poles may not succeed in what have been desired to the reason of the Car, and inducing him to make the procession of the work of the poland have received fresh reinferenced by Poland, in which wortfring is painted in the poland have received fresh reinferenced by the condition of the formatic poland have received moderadoes; but this era of good feeling is past, never to roturn, and they are not only going to run their own men, but have even substituted the most there gip paced radicals, such as Dr. Jacoby, of Konigsberg, and Mremme, who was banished from Prussia on account of the part he played in 1845. In this dilemma ministers will probably fail back upon their approved policy of inaction, and not interfece in the elections, either on one side or the other; but as the subordmate functionaries of government are mossly appointed by the Mantennie Cabinet, they are sure to agitate in favor of the reaction, and we may therefore expect the next Chamber to contain a large infusion of feudal and democratic elements, while the racks of the juste militar, who formed the majority in the late Legislature, are likely to be greatly diminished.

I est at their received by way of Russia announce the conclusion of a treaty of commerce with China, on the 2d of September, by the Prussia Plenipotentiary, Count Eclemberg, and by which, with the exception of a resident ambassador at Pekin, Prussia will be placed on the footing of the most favored nations. They also notify the arrival of a Japanese embassy, who will visit Berlin en route for Paris and London, and whose apparation will be quite a novelty in this capital.
